Development Producer

Job of the Week

Development producers find stories, concepts and scripts and get them into good enough shape to be commissioned by a TV channel or made into a feature film. For example a programme such as The Traitors will have initially been pitched by its creator who would have then worked with a Development Producer to create the show we see on our TV screens currently. Development Producers will also be involved in 'selling' the concept to a buyer such as a TV channel or production company. Development Producers need excellent written and spoken communications skills as well as a real passion for story telling.

A good LinkedIn profile is really important especially for those at the start of their career. Find out what should be in a profile and how to start using LinkedIn during this FREE webinar.
