

CAREERS NEWSLETTER

Discover a wealth of careers related content; click on the picture to find out more. This first edition of the year explores how our new school values link to the world of work.

Our school values aren't just relevant to school life. By living by these values you will also be helping to make yourself more employable in the future. Many companies have their own set of values and during the recruitment process they will be looking for evidence of how well you meet these. This article explores how large employers, such as the NHS and BA, will look at your application to identify the values and skills you can offer their organisation.

Few roles epitomise the value of 'Service' better than a career with the armed forces. Click on the image to explore the wide range of opportunities available in the British Army. From roles you will expect, such as Infantry Soldier or Engineering Officer, to roles you might not have known you could pursue in the armed forces, such as Biomedical Scientist, Chef, Solicitor or Intelligence Expert. Similarly wide ranging opportunities are also available via the Royal Navy and the Royal Force.

Medicine is a popular career aspiration for many of our pupils. Gaining a place at medical school is highly competitive but admissions tutors aren't just looking for As & A*s at A Level they also want to meet candidates who can work under their core values. One of those values, 'Respect', mirrors one of our own. Medical school applicants may be asked to explain what this value means to them and asked how they have demonstrated it during their educational journey.

Old Novaportan Radzi Chinyanganya was a popular and inspiring visitor at Speech Day in July. He was far from an overnight success story however and needed to demonstrate real 'Resilience' as he pursued his dream of becoming a TV presenter. Click on the link to find out more about his route to success.

If you have feedback about the careers programme at Adams please contact me.

